📖 "The Psychology of Money" by Morgan Housel is one of the best books I've read in recent times!

Packed with timeless financial principles, compelling anecdotes, and actionable insights, it resonated deeply with me—especially since I had been unknowingly applying many of these concepts even before reading it.

💡 Here's a glimpse of the wisdom inside:

- ✅ The world is big and complex. Luck and risk are both real and hard to distinguish. Focus on what you can control.
- ✅ Use money to buy back your time.
- ✅ Be kind and less flashy.
- ✅ Success has a price—define it and be willing to pay for it.
- ✅ Financial decisions aren't made in spreadsheets but at the dinner table. They're less about maximizing returns and more about minimizing the chance of disappointing a loved one.
- ✅ Instead of asking a financial advisor, "What stocks are cheap?" or "Is a recession coming?", ask: "What do you do with your own money?"
- ✅ A powerful takeaway from Ken Murray's essay "How Doctors Die"—doctors make different end-of-life decisions for themselves because they fully understand what's ahead. They go gently.
- ✅ Charlie Munger once said, "I didn't intend to get rich. I just wanted to be independent."

Looking back, I'm generally happy with my own career choices — but even happier with my financial decisions so far and the independence that I have because of them.

This book isn't just about money—it's about "life". The principles of patience, long-term thinking, and understanding our emotional biases apply to everything.
