🚀 सहज जीवन: probably the first open-source, collaborative, public, and live Marathi book, built transparently on GitHub. 🚀

The first part is a translation of Leo Babauta's "The Effortless Life" in Marathi, and the second part is open for contributions. I've already added a couple of chapters there myself.

The idea is simple: anyone with useful insights about leading a good life can join and contribute.

Contributions are voluntary, no money involved.

💡 Eligibility criteria for contributors:

- Fluency in reading and writing Marathi

- Basic GitHub literacy (fork, commit, PR). LaTeX expertise is not required

- And yes, you must have read almost all of PuLa. That's non-negotiable 😊

You can either refine the translation of the pending chapters or add fresh chapters of your own. Just fork the repo, add your changes, and send a PR.

You can also your add your name as co-author, thus build your own version of the book into a PDF, print it for yourself, and even publish it for wider circulation.

I'm planning to self-publish a slightly updated version via Notion Press, which will naturally come with some costs. Feel free to do the same, the PDF is freely available in the repo.

If you want to add a chapter, just place it at the end and submit a PR (Pull Request). If you are not comfortable with LaTeX or GitHub, you can share me the content via Google-Docs or email, I will add that on your behalf.

👉 If you're interested in this whole "effort," drop a comment below or message me your Gmail ID. I'll schedule a short online meet or create a chat group to align next steps.

IMO, this is not just a book, it's a movement: bringing open-source culture to Marathi literature. Imagine being part of a collective that publishes a free, evolving, community-owned book!

📝 Attaching the partial draft PDF here for a quick taste. (It's a very rough draft, just to give you the idea.)
